

Publisher's Note

Warmest congratulations to Bill Finlayson for yet another fascinating volume in Our Lands Speak series.

Our team at I C Publishing continue to be inspired by Bill's inclusive approach to his work, always open to professional collaboration with the goal to educate the public and enrich their experiences further by generously sharing what he and others have learned. The added layers of historic connection, the families and their stories, and architecture of the time make The Archaeology, History, and Architecture of the Philip Eckardt Log House a captivating read for all—archaeologists, historians, and the public alike.

Compliments to Bill's co-author, George Duncan, for his acumen and thoughtful contribution to this publication.

When you dig deep into the volumes of Our Lands Speak series, embrace the narratives, and study the incredible photos, you may find yourself imagining what it was like to live life in a different era. The extreme hardships many endured to pave a way for their families and communities and settle on new land are obvious, and yet in some contrast so is the appreciation for simpler times and who and what came before us.

Sincere gratitude to both Bill and George for their diligent and conscientious storytelling through their individual areas of expertise. We're honoured to partner with you to publish this fine work.

Kindly,

Sheri Andrunyk
